1880.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHEMISTRY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND was incorporated under the 30th and 31st Victoria, chap. 131, sec. 23, on the 2nd October, 1877.

The Institute has been established to ensure that Consulting and Analytical Chemists are duly qualified for the proper discharge of the duties they undertake by a thorough study of Chemistry and allied branches of Science, in their application to the Arts, Public Health, Agriculture, and Technical Industry.

The Members of the Institute are divided into two grades, having the distinguishing ranks or degrees of Fellow and Associate respectively.

In the case of a Fellow, the Council of the Institute requires satisfactory evidence, as to training and fitness for the work of the Consulting and Analytical Chemist, to be produced before admitting any person to that degree, and an examination is imposed whenever the Council deems it necessary. Fellows must be at least 24 years of age.

In the case of Associates the present Regulations require every applicant for admission to this grade to submit to a stringent examination in Practical Chemistry, and to show to the satisfaction of the Council that he has passed through a course of three years' study of Theoretical and Analytical Chemistry, Physics, and Elementary Mathematics. An Associate must be at least 21 years of age before admission, and is not eligible for the higher rank of Fellow, until he has been continuously engaged for three years in the study and practical work of Applied Chemistry, in a manner that shall be considered satisfactory by the Council.

P R I Z E S .

Dr. Frankland has offered a prize of £50 for "The best original investigation involving gas analysis." Dr. C. Meymott Tidy has also offered a prize of £25 for the best original investigation on "Special Reactions of the Alkaloids, and their Separation from Organic Mixtures." These prizes are open, not only to Associates, but to all persons, except Fellows of the Institute, who shall before the 31st December next, have qualified themselves for the Associateship in all respects short of passing the prescribed practical examination, and the Council has decided to accept successful competition for these prizes in place of such practical examination.
